Iran delivers a comprehensive proposal to end the war as indirect negotiations with Washington continue through Pakistani mediation.

Key Developments

- Iran submits 14-point proposal outlining terms for ending war with US and Israel.
- Iranian proposal reportedly demands guarantees against future military action and blockade removal.
- Tehran seeks broader settlement within 30 days rather than temporary ceasefire arrangement.
- Iranian officials reiterate distrust toward Washington despite continued diplomatic engagement.

Iran Presents 14-Point Proposal

Fars News Agency reported on Sunday that Iran has submitted a 14-point proposal outlining its conditions for ending the war, as indirect contacts with the United States continue through Pakistani mediation.

According to informed sources cited by the agency, exchanges between Tehran and Washington are taking place through Pakistan despite what Iranian officials describe as “continuing distrust” toward the United States.

Fars said the diplomatic track was activated following approval by relevant Iranian authorities and described the proposal as a “clear roadmap” aimed at ending what Tehran calls an “imposed war.”

The agency added that the Iranian proposal defines Tehran’s “red lines” within any future agreement and comes in response to a separate nine-point proposal submitted by Washington.

Key Iranian Demands

Tasnim News Agency confirmed the existence of the 14-point Iranian response and reported that Tehran's proposal centers primarily on securing a complete and permanent end to the war.

According to the report, the US proposal included a two-month ceasefire framework, while Iran insisted that all major issues should instead be resolved within 30 days through a broader settlement.

Tasnim reported that Tehran's proposal includes demands for guarantees against future military attacks, the withdrawal of US forces from areas near Iran, the lifting of maritime restrictions, the unfreezing of Iranian assets, and compensation payments.

The proposal also reportedly calls for ending hostilities across all fronts, including Lebanon, and establishing a new framework governing the Strait of Hormuz.

Iran is currently awaiting an official American response to the proposals.

Deputy Foreign Minister Confirms Initiative

Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Kazem Gharib Abadi confirmed that Tehran had formally submitted a proposal aimed at permanently ending the US-Israeli war against Iran.

Speaking during a briefing for foreign ambassadors in Tehran, Gharib Abadi said the proposal had been delivered through Pakistani mediation.

"The ball is now in the American court," he stated, referring to the choice between diplomacy and continued war.

At the same time, the deputy foreign minister emphasized that Iran continues to maintain "pessimism and lack of trust" toward the United States and Washington's intentions regarding negotiations.

The diplomatic efforts come amid continuing regional tensions following months of confrontation involving Iran, the United States, Israel, and multiple regional fronts.

While both sides continue indirect communication, Iranian officials have repeatedly stressed that negotiations will not alter Tehran's broader strategic positions or security demands.
